Mentorship Program
LACCD has a program called Project Match that is designed to recruit and prepare diverse faculty. From their website, this summarizes the purpose of the program:
“The Los Angeles Community College District (LACCD), comprised of nine area community colleges, offers Project MATCH as a program to prepare and recruit a diverse community college faculty who are sensitive to the needs of the students and community it serves. The goals of the program are to (1) improve the diversity of the faculty pool in the District, (2) mentor participants to serve as role models reflecting that diversity within the District, and (3) better reflect the diversity of the communities within the largest community college district in the nation.”

Recommendations

- Invest funds to place job advertisements in more locations to intentionally target minoritized and underrepresented groups.
- Consider adopting rubrics designed to evaluate a diverse candidate pool and reduce unintentional privileging of already privileged groups. For example, we recognize that potential faculty from minoritized races might not have had access to the same schools, trainings, and experiences because of persistent systemic racism.
- Create professional development on how to intentionally create selection committees that value diversity, equity, inclusivity, and justice.
- Research whether students can be added to faculty search committees or in other parts of the selection process.
